Understanding the Childcare Crisis: Affordability, Quality, and Scarcity

Families with young children choose between spending a significant portion of their income on childcare, finding a cheaper and potentially lower-quality option, or leaving the workforce to care for their children. Lower-income families are often further forced to sacrifice other needs and opportunities to make things work. Compass is the only licensed, high-quality center in Monroe County to provide its own sliding fee scale in addition to federal and state assistance programs. We believe that a high-quality, safe early learning environment should be accessible to all local families.

High-quality, licensed childcare is more expensive than in-state college tuition.

The average income in Monroe County is $39,880 however the self-sufficiency standard is $58,535 per person. Many families are forced to choose between competing needs - housing, food, clothing, transportation, healthcare, and, ultimately, childcare, which costs an average of $1,648 per child per month. Further, as many as 1 in 4 local families live below the poverty level of $25,750 per year - the cost of childcare often outweighs one working adult's wages.

There are only enough spots for 30% of Monroe County children in licensed childcare centers.

Early childhood education can have important effects on later social, emotional, and academic success. A lack of affordable, quality care options can be detrimental to the development of the child, create a barrier to parents' employment, & present challenges to local employers.

What does this tell us?

Our program is providing a critical safety net to Monroe County families. More families than ever are enrolled on MCUM's own fee scale rather than the government programs. These are families who are forced to choose between competing basic needs, like food, housing, transportation, and childcare. This tells us that we must continue to provide our unmatched childcare, and we must be able to offer our sliding fee scale in order to be accessible to families who have no other affordable, high-quality childcare options.

Our 2020 Goal

We strive to stabilize the Compass fee scale and continue to pursue the highest-level of quality in caring for children.

One Volunteer, Double the Impact

Rachel Pak is one of our food pantry volunteers. We know the impact she has made by helping our clients shop for food, bringing in and logging new donations, and sorting and organizing food donations. However, we did not anticipate the impact we would have on her personal life.

“Back in June of 2019, I started volunteering at MCUM while seeking a full-time opportunity in the environmental/sustainability field. In May, I graduated from Indiana University with my Master of Public Affairs at the O’Neill School of Public and Environmental Affairs concentrating in environmental sustainability courses. Being from Bloomington, I thought spending my time in my community while job searching was a great way to give back to my hometown. Not only did MCUM give me a great and memorable volunteer experience, but also MCUM shaped my career search.

Specifically volunteering at MCUM helped me narrow down my interest within sustainability. Helping MCUM clients in the food pantry made me constantly think about the food we as individuals and community groups donate for our local low-income and minority families. The food we consume is to not only keep us full, but also to keep us nourished and healthy. Also, we live in a country where food security and food waste are big issues. Then it all made sense—why not look for a job that tacks food sustainability, food security, and food waste?

As I head off for my first job in the Corporate Social Responsibility team at Sysco Corporation, I’m so excited that I’ll be working for a company that recognizes and tackles these food issues in the US. For those staying in Bloomington after graduation while job searching, I highly recommend volunteering at a place like MCUM to not only have some time off from job searching, but also to give back to the Bloomington community. MCUM provided invaluable experience, and I am forever grateful that MCUM welcomed me with open arms!”

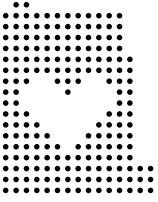

Thank you to Rachel, and so many like her, who are dedicated to giving back to our community by volunteering with us!

Food Pantry Involvement Lunch

Want to learn about ways you and your organization can get more involved in MCUM’s Food Pantry? Join us on February 19th, from noon to 1pm. You’ll hear from volunteers and congregation leaders as they discuss their partnership with MCUM and how they go about coordinating their own food drives. Lunch will be provided!
